JANUARY NEWS

HIGHLIGHTS OF CLUB N

What a brand New Year to look forward to! This month will be full of skill learning in their school subjects. Children will learn new math skills which will help them add, subtract, multiply and divide more quickly and easier. We will continue our current events and this year we will be involved in outside science experiments which will help the children build assessment skills that will improve their critical thinking.

We will also continue our Physical Education lessons because the children need to exert their energy for physical fitness and to build teamwork and self-esteem. Because children often use social comparison as a way of determining their ability in sports, participation in youth sports activities provide children with many opportunities to determine their ability compared with others on their team. (Ewing, 1997)

Unfortunately, given the influence of other factors such as maturation and previous knowledge of a sport on one's ability to perform a sport skill, children often reach incorrect conclusions about their ability. Thus, the role of parent, coaches and teachers is significant in helping children interpret their strengths and weaknesses in a sport.
